Mr. Claiborne's Letter.

[Those of our readers who delight in the sublime and beautiful, who feel an expansion of the mind on perusing the reflections and in communicating with the ideas of great men, cannot fail to derive an infinitude of gratification from the following terse and elegant Letter of Mr. T. CLAIBORNE, (a democratic member of congress from Virginia) to his constituents. The democrats of Georgia should treasure it up as the religious devotee does the relics of a saint;—for there is not a morsel of it but what is precious.]

SAVANNAH MUSEUM.

MY FELLOW CITIZENS OF BRUNSWICK DISTRICT, VIRGINIA.

AGAIN I resume my pen, to discharge a duty that I hold indispensable, but which should have been performed long ago, but from causes uncontrollable by me in their nature.

[But in the next paragraph he states the why and wherefore to be because.]

The interesting business has been so delayed, as not to furnish matter worthy the acceptance of my much esteemed constituents, until now: and even at this late day, is in such a state of imperfection, as will scarcely justify me to write you a circular letter; but ever willing to give you information, I cannot forbear, and though LEAN and BARREN, I know your goodness will induce you to take the will for the deed.

[We may suppose, then after the manner of Pharaoh's seven LEAN years, this is the first of the seven "LEAN and BARREN" sessions of Congress; and if we follow the spirit of prophecy, that the country has a long while yet to famish with democracy.]

There are but few laws past or likely to pass, of a public nature; and even those would afford you but little satisfaction, unless I could give you their sum and substance, which you know cannot be done in a letter.

[Their "sum and substance" from the belt of such a mill, would give double satisfaction.]

I have from time to time forwarded the newspapers [Pappa Duane's Aurora, and Miss Smith's Intelligencer,] to different parts of the district, which I consider as the best, the completest source of political information. But, first, I have a hand, and that hand holds a pen; and that pen has ink to yield you all the information in my power.

[Your college pedants may hoard and admire the lore of Roman and Grecian orators; a fig for them; the climaxes and figures shrink into a pristine nothingness, when compared with a Claiborne's originality of thought and expression. Witness the matchless sublimity of his climax, when he says—

"I have a HAND; and in that hand there is a PEN; and in that pen there is INK, to yield you all the information—"

What an inimitable fawell of words!]

You will no doubt have heard of the misunderstanding between this country and the government of Spain, in consequence of the superintendent of New Orleans shutting that port against the Americans. In consequence of this, and some other circumstances, Mr. Monroe, our late governor, is sent as minister plenipotentiary to the court of Spain, and the republic of France, as it is called, to negotiate, and I sincerely wish that negotiations may succeed. If, however, negotiations cannot succeed, I am sure I need not say to my country be prepared to protect and defend your own rights, for I believe it is always ready for that. It is probable that the president will be authorized to hold a sufficient force in readiness to meet any event; we have great confidence in him, and such power will be safely deposited. The many good deeds of his administration entitled him to confidence; but I do not choose to launch out into lengthy eulogiums on his character; it needs no such support.

[A lucky thought; for the man's character is already overwhelmed with such support.]

Behold your debts paid agreeable to instalment, and your treasury with 4 millions of dollars at public command; and how has this happened? [A very pertinent question. But the intelligent Mr. Claiborne, is very careful not to inform how it happened.] Was it ever so before, even while we were under the corse of internal taxes, and their train of officers, on whom I by no means intend to cast any reproach? The last session of Congress broke those fetters, and released you from their shackles, by the advice of a Jefferson.

[Yes, that session, to use a democratic expression, "kick'd to hell" the Judiciary and the Internal Taxes; directed the sale of two fifths of our infant navy, at two fifths of its value; which this session of Congress has found itself compelled to re-build at the original cost.—This is breaking fetters with a witness.]

I don't mean to contrast his character with any that have gone before him; it is enough for me to shew his merits, without opening the mouth of detraction against any of his predecessors. If they have been virtuous, let them enjoy the rewards of it; if otherwise, I leave them to the chastisement of that grater tribunal, THE PEOPLE. I will only further remark, as to the character of Mr. Jefferson, that he is humane; that he treats religion in all its forms with respect, he is plain, familiar, and accessible to the poorest man alive of good character—I often visit him, and sit and converse on suitable subjects, as unrestrained as with any neighbour I have by our fireside.

[There is something very admirable in this. Humane,—religion,—plain,—familiar, and accessible! Converting too, upon suitable subjects, as unrestrained as the backward man of Virginia or the pine barren planter of Georgia! Surely he must be something more than man that does all this!]

I have before told you, that our treasury is in a more flourishing situation than ever before; but it is impossible that I can give you a detailed account of receipts and expenditures in a letter, and therefore I shall not attempt it.

[i.e. It is impossible I can give you information on this head, without exposing the secrets of the party; therefore, I shall not attempt it. But here comes the news:]

An act is likely to pass to open a land-office for the sale of all the public lands south of Tennessee; and now look out for yourselves—shake your old leathern bags, and trump up all your old rusty dollars.

[There is for you! This man hasn't been to school to learn horriosity for nothing.]

This business will require surveyors, and furnish employment for many of our well educated youth who possess enterprise.

[There, haven't I procured offices for your sons, and didn't I tell you I would?]

I think it my duty to suggest these things, for I know not who may wish to embrace them.

To the above I have but little more to add; and first, I am in good health and high spirits. Seeing that republicanism is triumphing in this western world, and the language of '75 and '76 again to be heard, I feed and fatten on it. I have pleasure too in reflecting, that the hour is fast approaching, that will bring me to the friendly arms of my beloved country; and if I can only know that my public conduct has been consistent with their interest, and meets their approbation, my happiness will be complete. As to the issue of the ensuing election, I can only say, that I am willing to trust it to you. For when you consider that I nobly struggled through the revolutionary war to its happy issue, and when you remember that I have stood firm and struggled through all the convulsions of a political warfare, until our government seem fixed on the firmest basis of republicanism, you surely will not be willing to rob me of the laurels that my firmness and patriotism have won, and give them to another. No, first, this I do not believe; for being conscious of the rectitude of my political conduct, I feel a confidence in your justice and consideration, and to those heaven born principles I appeal. I surely have nothing to say to the prejudice of my worthy competitor; but it is no business of mine to make interests for him on the present occasion.

There was a time when I served my country at the expense of my domestic happiness and interest. [Reader! Can you refuse the tribute of a tear, to relieve the pungency of this man's recollected sufferings?] I then had to leave a charming lady for six or seven months in the year. [Admirable!] It was unjust to her that I should do so; but my country called, and I obeyed.

[This man must have been electrified with patriotism, from the point of his nose to the very tip of his great toe. For mark his exultation when he says]

Now my situation is different, since by the act of God I am deprived of that amiable companion, and a lone home is rather a curse than a blessing to me; my time is now my own, and can never be better spent than in my country's service; and if it can be made useful to you, it is at your command.

[i.e. Heaven has PROPITIOUSLY SMILED in relieving me of my wife; so I am thereby enabled to give myself wholly to my country!—There is a loftiness of idea in this sentence, which our circumscribed powers of mind do not sufficiently comprehend to admire.]

I now draw to a conclusion, and after having finished the work you gave me to do, I hope, under the protection of Providence, to be at home about the 9th or 10th of March, and with respect and esteem again subscribe myself your faithful public servant.

THOMAS CLAIBORNE.

Washington City, Feb. 26, 1803.

P. S. The session is now so far span out, that I am obliged to resort to a publication of this letter in both the papers of Petersburg; they have a general circulation, and are probably the best means of general information to my district. T. C.

FROM THE LONDON COURIER.

FRENCH SUPERIORITY.

We have often wished to make some animadversions upon the superiority which France affects over every other nation in Europe. We do not remember that the French before the revolution were presumptuous enough to assert that they had made greater progress in the arts and sciences than the English; or that their country had produced greater men than Newton or Bacon, than Milton or Locke. They were then content to divide the prize with us. The superiority therefore, which they now affect, must have been obtained during the Revolution. During the Revolution! if we called upon to select a period in which the human mind in France had not only made no progress, but had taken a retrograde step, we should certainly select the period of the French Revolution. The press, indeed, has groaned with the number of publications, but are they not all gone long since "to the family vault of all the Capulets?" In twenty years who will remember the names and authors of one of them? Has any work been produced upon the law of Nations? Has true philosophy made a single step in the last twelve years? Has one historical work, worthy of notice, been published? What progress has been made in classical literature? Has one poet of any eminence darted a ray through the gloom of this long night? Delille belongs to the old court. In chemistry, in astronomy, the French have made a rapid progress, but it would be unjust to consider that progress, as the consequence of the Revolution. Fourcroy and Lalande were known and patronized, and honored long before that period.

If we were to present a catalogue of the works that have been generated by the revolution, what a long train of black and venomous productions would disgust us! Fortunate indeed it is, that the ignorance of the authors was an antidote to the poison of their doctrines; that learning and genius did not make the portion palatable; that the mischief was evanescent, and that all these productions will be concealed forever, under the thickest veil of oblivion.

If France founds her claim to superiority upon the military fame she has acquired, we must acknowledge that of that species of fame the Revolution has brought her large accessions. Driven from the shrine of liberty, she found a refuge in the temple of military glory; but will her military fame justify this claim to superiority? Will history ratify that claim? Has she placed the Hans, and the Goths, and the Vandals above the Roman name, because their military force triumphed at last over the ancient seat of liberty and of learning? Do we admire the military achievements of an Alexander so much as we condemn the murder of a Clytus, the general that had fought under him? Who dwells now, but with horror, upon the exploits of a Tamerlain, a Charles the XIth, or a Zingis Khan? The impartial pen of history has long since torn the laurels from their brows, and flung them as the scourge of the human race. Their ambition was all personal; because in the pursuit of military glory they considered nothing sacred; neither the faith of treaties nor the independence of nations, nor the rights of people. The world was their victim, and man was their slave.

But if France had acquired great military fame, have we no naval glory to counter balance it? Are the victories of the 1st of June, off Cape St. Vincent, of Camperdown, and of the Nile, less brilliant than those of the French in Italy, and in Germany? Has France one naval achievement to set against them? And have we a quired no military renown?—Was not the Consul himself checked and defeated at Acre by our British Cour de Lion, Sir Sidney Smith, and a handful of men? Was not his army, was not his veteran troops, that had beaten Austrians, Russians, and Italians, were not they afterwards conquered and driven from Egypt by British soldiers? On what other ground then does this boasted superiority rest.

Have any useful discoveries, any inventions for the benefit of the human race, during the Revolution, palliated or diminished the enormous guilt of that event? We recollect two—the Telegraph, certainly an ingenious invention, useful in times of war, but which can never eminently contribute to the benefit or happiness of mankind; the other invention is that of the Guillotine. Of both these discoveries it may be said, that they tend to accelerate the work of human destruction. They belong certainly to the revolution. We might add to other discoveries, the undoubted legitimate offspring of the Revolution—the Noyades and the Fusillades, the Loire drownings and the Lyons shootings. It is not a little to the honour of our own nation that we are able to meet these inventions with two of a very different description; with two that will cast a bright lustre on the British name to the latest ages; with two that will make the British nation blessed in whatever quarter of the globe, and under whatever form prayer and praise are addressed to the Divine Being; with two that are, and are alone, for the preservation of mankind. Need we name them? Need we mention the discovery of the Vaccine and of the Life Boat?

We might pursue the subject further; but we purposely conclude our observations here. The account of discoveries by the two nations will be found to stand thus:

France.	England.
The Guillotine.	The Vaccine.
The Telegraph.	The Life Boat.
The Noyades.
The Fusillades.

INDUSTRY, THE CURE FOR POVERTY.

"Begging being a trade, and a very beneficial one, no person who observes the astonishing increase of that profession in this quarter will hesitate to believe. And how can it be remedied? Is the general question, to which no one gives an answer. Not easily by any measures of police certainly; but I will venture to suggest a cure in one word, and that a pretty effectual one—a Workhouse!"

"I remembered to have heard of an old Justice of the Peace, who lived in a village in the vicinity of a large town, who, from his knowledge of the almost invincible aversion of the begging tribe from regular labour of every kind, long contrived to have his forecourt and garden watered gratis, by itinerant beggars. As he had a handsome house near the road, it naturally drew the attention of the mumping fraternity. On their application for charity, he constantly asked them the usual question, 'Why don't you work?' To which the usual reply was always made, 'So I would, God bless your Worship, if I could get employment.' On this, musing a while, as if inclined by charity, he would set them to weed his court or garden, furnishing them a hoe and wheel barrow, and promising them a shilling when their job was completed. To work then they would go, with much seeming gratitude and alacrity. The Justice stayed by them, or visited them from time to time till they had performed two thirds of their task; he then retired to a private corner or place, in order to prevent them from his tools, and there waited for the happy moment when, which was the elopement of men, who rather than complete what they had done. This method scarce one disappointment, the long practice, till at length his long gone forth among the mendicants, he was troubled with no more for charity."

PETERSBURG, April 22.

The following was communicated to us by a friend in the county of Brunswick: It will probably not be amiss to inform the public of the singular case, of the death of two white women, which happened last Friday night, the 15th inst. within a few miles of my house, in Brunswick; both of the name of DANIEL.
The first was a little advanced in life, the other a healthy and handsome girl about 15 or 16 years of age. The day before the solemn event was discovered, the two women, in perfect health, had made an excursion from home, and were overtaken by night on their return, but still had advanced in the dark so far as to get within forty or fifty yards of their dwelling; and there, for some cause unknown to us, sat down side and side, and made their cold and icy bed. Both were discovered in the morning by the darling son of the eldest, and as he approached the gloomy spot, found that death had did his office, and the lifeless corpe separated from each other by one single tobacco hill.

An inquest being taken, and a very particular examination made on the extraordinary occurrence, no possible discovery could be made of any violence, either by themselves or any one else. No surmise can yet be made what produced the mortal change, unless the stimulus of spirit, the exertions of the day, & the inclemency of the night should have all combined to strike the fatal stroke."

Alexandria Advertiser.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 27.

A letter from a gentleman in an official capacity at Berlin, (Prussia) to his correspondent in N. York, dated the last of February says, that "war is inevitable."

CONNECTICUT FEDERALISM.

The federalists have gained since the last election, as is already ascertained in the county of New Haven three federal representatives; in the county of New London two—in the county of Fairfield three—and in the county of Litchfield eight.— The number of democrats in the house of representatives will not exceed forty. Governor Trumbull and Lieutenant governor Treadwell, the present treasury and secretary, are re-elected by great majorities.
Particularly we are safe in asserting, that governor Trumbull's vote will exceed the most sanguine calculations.

(New-Haven Pap.)

A gentleman who travelled thro' Connecticut during the recent Election, informs us, that the attempts of the Democratic leaders to revolutionize that State have produced an effect directly opposite to their intentions. The publication of the secret circular, sent out from New Haven, roused and brought forward many heretofore inactive Federalists; and the advertisements posted at the Church doors in the country towns, for the Republicans to meet in Caucus to agree on Candidates, had the effect of bringing to the election considerable numbers of Federalists who have generally neglected to exercise their privilege, but who seeing the endeavors of the Democrats to place themselves in power, came forward with the resolution not to submit the management of their State concerns to the caprice of a restless minority. The consequence, is, that the towns heretofore represented by Federal characters, have generally re-elected their members by larger majorities than last year; and even some which sent democratic Representatives, have by this exertion of the federalists, elected those of a different character, and no doubt exists of Governor Trumbull's re-election by a much greater number of votes than in the past years.

(Bost. Gaz.)

The Executors to the will of the Hon. John Bulkeley, late Consul of the United States have announced to the Trustees of the Humane Society, in a letter to James Lloyd, jun. Esq. that Mr. Bulkeley bequeathed a legacy of One Hundred Pounds sterling to said Society, of which he was a member to promote the benevolent purposes of the institution. ibid.

Extract of a letter from Northampton county, to the Editor of the Lancaster Journal.

DEAR SIR,

I saw a paragraph in your paper some time since, which does not only surprise me, but every man that I have spoken to on the subject, both in the county where I live and in Wayne. That is, that Judge Ryerson was removed from office, WITHOUT A HEARING, after complaints had been preferred against him and without notice of such complaint. Believe me Sir, I never have heard anything since the revolution that has caused so much uneasiness among the people. Every person I have conversed with on the subject seems to be surprised and alarmed.
I have for many years been personally acquainted with Judge Ryerson and from every observation, I have found him to be a man of information, modest, decent, sensible and prudent; and from what I can collect, if he had been informed of the complaints, could have made it appear that the very complaints against him originated in a faction that intrigue invented, and that the hope of succeeding carried on.

Mr. Ryerson was a strong advocate for the present measures and admitted all his power to promote the very persons who have sought his downfall.

I have served a long time in the militia during the revolution; I have ever advocated the present measures, but if men are through intrigue (when in public trust) to sap the foundation of others and build themselves upon the ruin; condemn them on complaints without a hearing or even letting them know that they are complained of; from such a government the Lord deliver us."

The Honourable Matthew Clay has addressed a letter to his late constituents, dated "Federal City, Feb. 22d, 1803." Such letters are not always the composition of the gentlemen who subscribe them.
I have got three dollars to do such a thing for a member, with a general injunction to write just what I pleased. It is said that Duane deals to a considerable extent in this kind of haberdashery.

(Recorder.)

SUN-FLOWER OIL.

It appears from experiments made sometimes in this State, (Pennsylvania) that a bushel of sun-flower seed, yields a gallon of oil, and that an acre of ground planted with the seed, at three feet apart, will yield between forty and fifty bushels of the seed. This oil is as mild as sweet oil, and is equally agreeable with it in sallads, and as a medicine. It may moreover be used with advantage in paints, varnishes and ointments. From its being manufactured in our country, it may always be procured and used in a fresh state. The oil is expressed from the seed in the same manner that cold drawn linsed oil is obtained from flax seed and with as little trouble. Sweet olive oil sells for six shillings a quart. Should the oil of the sun flower seed sell for only two thirds of that price, the product of an acre of ground, supposing it to yield only forty bushels of the seed, will be thirty two pounds, a sum far beyond the product of an acre of ground in any kind of grain. The seed is raised with little trouble, and grows in land of moderate fertility. It may be gathered and shelled, fit for the extraction of the oil, by women and children.

American Museum.

The following is an extraordinary and melancholy instance of the fragility of human hope: A young lady of Dover, had been some years engaged to an officer belonging to the Tiger, and who went out under the patronage of the gallant defender of Acre; he returned home late in that ship, and the meeting between these young people was such as might be expected in two attached amiable characters. The day before he arrived a small pimple appeared on the nose of Miss O—; whether the surprise had any immediate effect on the system or not, must be left to medical conjecture, but the inflammation suddenly extended itself round the part so slightly affected, and increased so rapidly, that on the second day she lost her sight, and, on the third, the affection reached her brain, she expired, vanishing from the high raised expectations of faithful attachment, as quickly as a flower, which withers before our eyes, even while we stop to gather it, and which would not seem more wonderful than the death of the young Lady to all who knew the commencement of her illness.

Mr. ELLIOT,

A citizen of America and resident of Richmond, Virginia,

Begs leave to inform the Ladies and Gentlemen of Alexandria, that THIS EVENING, 27th inst.
at Mr. Hodgskin's (formerly Mr. Reuno's) Tavern, sign of the Indian Queen, he will display

The ART, DEXTERITY & AGILITY OF HAND, to the greatest astonishment. He will command an Egg to fly in representation of a Bird, and will change it from one to two, three and four, as they fly, and never fall to the ground: Then he will change them into American Lizards; he will command these Lizards to dance, jump into his mouth, and hang to his tongue—this is a perfect reality. He will also command a piece of money to fly out of any spectator's mouth, into any other spectator's pocket, by the art of deception. He will likewise exhibit a number of deceptions with a pack of Cards that will appear impossible to the keenest eye, with a variety of other deceptions, equally curious, though not necessary to particularize.

Mr. E's deceptions on Cards have a tendency to discountenance instead of encouraging the horrid practice of Gaming.

Tickets of admittance a quarter of a dollar—children half price.

The performance was advertised to be held at Mr. Mott's tavern, but in consequence of a disappointment of a room, it will be held at the place abovementioned.

Several pieces of elegant Historical Tapestry from designs of Le Brun, one of the first painters that ever lived in Europe, intended to ornament a MUSEUM, a Columbia Gallery of Arts, or School of Drawing and Painting in Alexandria, for the instruction of young and ingenious artists and mechanics, and to gratify the curiosity of all persons of taste, residents or travellers in the United States, where such curious and beautiful pieces are very rare.

Apply to the owner as above, from 9 o'clock to one, A. M. and from 4 to 7 in the afternoon. He will stay in town only for a few days.

N. B. A MUSEUM is an enterprize not only honorable but very advantageous, for it is a real and rich property, daily increasing by the liberal and voluntary gifts of some well spirited men, travellers, and navigators, who present that useful establishment with the admirable productions of nature and art.
A very considerable revenue is yearly issuing from it, and as Alexandria is fast increasing in commerce and population, the institution of a Museum will add to the importance and splendor of the town, and would be of great advantage to the owner.
